The Property

Occupying a prominent position on the historic village square in Chittlehampton, Ardlui is a characterful period cottage with a wealth of traditional features and considerable potential for sympathetic restoration.

Believed to have originated as an open hall house in the mid-16th century, the property has evolved over subsequent centuries and retains features typical of its age, including a thatched roof, substantial exposed timber beams, an impressive inglenook fireplace and a traditional winder staircase.

The cottage is currently in a stripped-out condition and requires comprehensive renovation, offering an opportunity for a purchaser to complete the project and create a home tailored to their own requirements.

Planning permission and listed building consent were granted in October 2021 for significant alterations, remodelling and improvements. Further planning permission has also been granted for the conversion of the garage and shippon to provide ancillary accommodation. These consents provide a useful starting point for those wishing to explore the property's potential, subject to confirming their status and any outstanding requirements.

CGI images within these particulars illustrate the potential appearance of the property following renovation and are for illustrative purposes only.
