DESCRIPTION

Lowertown House is an exceptional Grade II* Listed former farmhouse sitting in a circa 0.3 acre plot with a rich and fascinating history, understood to date back to the late 16th century before being extended and remodelled during the 17th and 18th centuries into the house seen today. Originally forming part of the renowned Mount Edgcumbe Estate, the property has remained in the ownership of the same family for approximately 90 years and now presents an increasingly rare opportunity to become the custodian of a substantial period home of immense character and charm. Arranged over three floors and distinguished by its attractive triple-fronted façade, the accommodation is both generous and highly adaptable, offering excellent potential for multi-generational living and further development, subject to any necessary permissions and consents. Complemented by level parking, attractive gardens and a range of useful outbuildings, Lowertown House is a home of remarkable heritage and enduring appeal, offering a rare chance to own one of Landrake's most distinctive and historically significant residences.

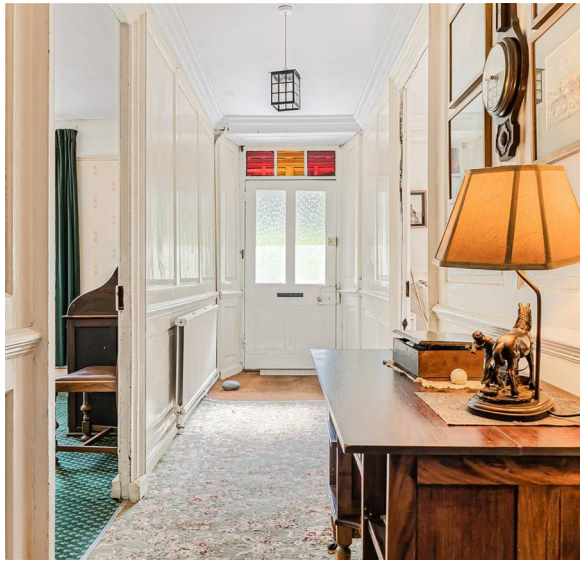

ACCOMODATION

The accommodation retains an abundance of period character, with many original features from across the centuries surviving throughout. Entered via a handsome timber front door with polished ironmongery , a welcoming entrance hall provides access to the principal reception rooms. Positioned either side of the hall are two elegant south-facing reception rooms overlooking the front garden. The panelled drawing room is a beautifully proportioned room, displaying classic Georgian symmetry with sash windows complete with shutters, built-in cabinetry and a wood-burning stove set within a slate fireplace. The formal dining room and sitting room also enjoy attractive garden views and feature working fireplaces, creating highly versatile spaces for both everyday family life and entertaining. To the rear of the property, the farmhouse-style kitchen/breakfast room is rich in character, featuring slate flagstone floors, shaker-style cabinetry, solid oak worktops and a gas hob set within the original chimney breast alongside a traditional clome oven. A secondary kitchen/utility room and cloakroom complete the ground floor accommodation.

Two staircases, positioned at either end of the house, rise to the first floor where there are six bedrooms, a family bathroom and a separate shower room. The principal bedrooms are particularly well proportioned and enjoy delightful south-facing views over the gardens. One of the bedrooms accommodates an impressive half-tester bed, understood to have remained within the house for well over a century, adding to the property's remarkable history and sense of continuity. In addition to the principal rooms, there are three further double bedrooms and a single bedroom.

Both staircases continue to the second floor, where a substantial attic room spans the full length of the house. Featuring original fireplaces at either end, this expansive space offers tremendous scope for further enhancement and adaptation, subject to any necessary consents. Throughout, Lowertown House is adorned with a wealth of period features and historic detailing, with each room contributing to the rich story of this impressive and much-loved family home.
